PART-7

“That One Remarkable Autumn of My High School”

Everything went on fine after that Incident. Waking up at Five, doing my Morning Routine, Going to school, Attending the classes, Refreshing during recess, sincerely practicing routines of the Cheerleading squad, choreographing routines sometimes, coming back home study for hours, having my dinner meanwhile, having a small talk with my parents and going back to sleep at 10pm, was lifestyle for nearly two and a half years. But on one particular day, as I about to hit the school backyard from my locker, I accidentally overheard two members of the Cheerleading squad. They were squeaking about something in a perplexed manner.

One of them said, "Julia, what do you mean? Did Miss Main Character Syndrome see you register your name for the upcoming event? Oh God!, You should have been careful!". That was when I realised their true intentions for bringing me into the Cheerleading squad.

Before I joined this school, The Cheerleader was the topper of my class and the best at sports and at dancing but once I entered, I took over her position. It is not completely my fault that I am better. But diverting me from studying well by bringing me into Cheerleading is merely grudging in the first place and now using my creativity and skills for recognition and treating me like I am nothing after all she got, is totally insane. They think it is the first time I noticed? Huh! They are so wrong! I had glanced at some members' mobile a couple of times. There would be notifications regarding registrations for shows happening nearby. I acted like I had never noticed. Waiting for a clear picture. And I that I got it, It was time to confront them. I took my long confident steps to the back door of the Ground floor. My chest burning with fury, I fling the door open and stepped out. There was a loud music playing, with some bold and loud steps, I reached and turned off the speaker and turned towards the green-eyed Maria, who tricked me all along and said those little but clear words

"Good Bye! I am leaving for good". And dumped all my stuff that stated me as a Cheerleading squad member. I had better things to focus on. I went home, dug up all my progress reports and gisted out the corrections which must be made within me.

I modified my daily routine, shifted my study hours to mornings from evenings and planned to learn new skills every two weeks during the time, I used to practice my cheer squad routines. I encountered a lot of changes in me. I got more amiable, I developed my self confidence to the next level, I hiked back to my topper self, got along with new friends. My new friends circle was with clean intentions, they wanted the best to happen to me. Life went on like that for weeks. But, out of nowhere, My Dad received a call from some commonly known brand in the town, asking me to feature as the model in their upcoming poster. I was flabbergasted upon hearing the news, I asked for some time to commit to the agreement.

And you will get to know about it in the next part!

Until then,

It's Amrithavarshini of Grade 9,

Signing off!

Do you know the difference between watch, see and look ???

These three are verbs but, they have distinct meanings.

Watch: To observe something for a period of time.

2. I like to watch stars at night.

See: To notice something with our own eyes.
